BRUCE MADU

Bruce Madu is a geologist whose career path began on a farm in central Alberta. Knowing his interests lay in science and the outdoors; geology was an excellent fit. Four decades later the discipline still fascinates him with something new learned each day. The choice to join public service defined most of his working years with positions requiring extensive travel in British Columbia plus bonus adventures in Peru and throughout Asia. His presentation will look at the varied experiences being a geologist entails and peeks at some of the places visited in his career.

Recognizing that most prospectors and geologists also have amazing adventures, fellow colleagues will be welcomed to share their top experience in a 15 minute soapbox-style forum at the end of the lecture. Participants should have an image queued for a screen share and take at most a minute to share their story. It could be your unique opportunity to share why being an explorer is an amazing career choice.
